Priming the wall is an important step in creating a mural, because the primer will help the paint stick to the wall more easily.. In some cases you can apply the primer directly over the pre-existing paint on the wall, and the mural will be fine. It depends on how much elbow work you want to put into it and also on how long you want the mural to last.

If your paint color is dark and rich but you don't want a super shiny effect, step down at least one level on the sheen scale. That's because the darker and richer the paint color is, the more colorant it has, which boosts sheen. Ditto if you're painting a large, sun-washed, or imperfect wall. The higher the sheen, the more defects will show.
